INTRODUCTION

This bibliography on the anthropology of Ontario has resulted largely from the numerous inquiries from the public for reading material on the subject. It is hoped the list published here will be of use to librarians and school administrators in helping their clients and students to find the reading material they need.

The anthropology of Ontario, as of everywhere else, covers the subjects of prehistoric and historic archaeology, ethnology, linguistics and folklore. Physical anthropology, which is the study of the physical types of the native peoples, must also be included.

In order to provide some background setting for the Indians of Ontario, it has seemed desirable to list a number of general works on anthropology and these have been given first. The list is not exhaustive, and does not contain all of the major references. It does, however, indicate a number of very useful books. It should be pointed out also that the anthropology of Ontario cannot be isolated from that of the surrounding regions, and also it sometimes happens that there is no adequate study pertaining directly to Ontario. Under these circumstances, it has often been necessary to give a reference to a work dealing not with Ontario Indians, but with peoples almost identical to those found here. The references to the Six Nations Indians is a case in point; Morgan's League of the Iroquois is a classic in its field but it deals with the Six Nations people residing in New York State. Since they differ in no essential respect from their kinsmen living in Ontario, it is equally applicable to our scene, and must be used since there is nothing else to take its place. Similar situations prevail in certain other areas also.

It should be made clear that this bibliography is by no means complete. Indeed, to present a complete one would in some ways defeat the purposes indicated in the first paragraph, since it would be very long and cumbersome to use. The present list includes many of the outstanding works in the various fields of Ontario anthropology, and numerous papers of less significance. Where there are gaps, it should be possible for the student to fill them out by careful study of the references given in the various papers cited.

It has been necessary in many cases to make citations to articles in periodicals. Unfortunately most of these will be difficult to find in the majority of libraries. The situation is however not as bad as it might seem for it should be possible to arrange with some large library to obtain photographic copies at small cost. In this way, the needs of readers with special interests may be accommodated. Finally, it will be noted that a list of addresses for periodicals is given for those libraries who wish to subscribe to them.

Thanks are due Miss Nancy Powell who spent many hours establishing the proper citations for the references.
